

2024 Stahlman Beekeeping E-mail Notes Issue #37a

Judi and I will be traveling this next week to the Boone, N.C. area to visit a granddaughter at App. State and a few beekeeping friends. We may also get up into Virginia to visit another beekeeping friend who has invited us up to visit his hives and maybe a stay-over. All that has to be worked out, but the weather forecast looks good. Temperatures will be on the uptrend from the light snow they had this week.

I rather like the idea of the bi-monthly format of the newsletters and will likely move from the weekly editions to 2 issues a month for 2025. I have been busy writing for ABJ (The American Bee Journal) and I am getting a number of requests to make on-line presentations even one from Australia. I still support the North Carolina State Beekeepers Association by being included on their speaker platform and look forward to club invitations when they need speakers for this coming bee season. Slowly request are coming in and I do not charge a fee -- I only ask that I might make a plug for ABJ during my talk.

I have added a PowerPoint presentation to this newsletter on fall and winter management. See the attached document.
